Sometimes causation is one part of a multi-stage test for legal liability. For example, for the defendant to be held liable for the tort of negligence, the defendant must have owed the plaintiff a duty of care, breached that duty, by so doing caused damage to the plaintiff, and that damage must not have been too remote.

Causation (law) - Wikipedia

Tort law uses a 'but for' test in order to establish a factual link between the conduct of the defendant and the injuries of the claimant. In other words, the question asked is 'but for the defendant's actions, would the harm have occurred?' If the answer to this question is yes, then causation cannot be shown, and vice versa.
